

Redundant Pipe Organ

M0117

Unknown. c.1880

Stocksbridge Methodist Church Manchester Rd
Deepcar Sheffield UK

2 manuals and pedals

12 speaking stops

Compass 56/30

Mechanical action to manuals, pneumatic action to pedals

The congregation of Stocksbridge Methodist Church is to unite with another and as a result the organ is now redundant.

I am informed that it was installed in 1880 and, apart from being repositioned in the church, appears to be unaltered.

The pedal board is the original straight flat

Balanced swell offset to the right, mechanical.

The projection at floor level beyond the main case is 14 inches. So the whole is within the overlap at impost level.

The console is set into the organ thus the minimal pedal board projection.

The stop jambs are square.

Apart from the altered swell pedal, this really does appear to be an original organ!

The pine case is attractive and is extended to the sides. The base end has the electric blowing plant feed at low level.

The organ is well made, probably by a northern builder, unfortunately an organ builder has removed the makers name when the organ was relocated in the church.

It is in excellent working order. However the leather motors to the pedals should be re-leathered on relocation.

The pipework is in good order and the display pipes are unusually but attractively decorated. More photos available on request.
